Comfort Reading

Books for me that would fit for me under comfort reading are books that make me think about it a few times to understand what is actually happening. Sort of like movies, well more what they used to be like. This ties into books that keep me into reading them. I don't like reading books that I can read through in like 30 minutes and not have to think about it to understand everything.

An example of a book that would fit this category for me is The Da Vinci Code by Dan Brown. To me, it isn't one of those books that I read right through and perfectly understand the plot during the first shot. First of all, it's a mystery book. This book is one of those books that takes deeper thought in order to understand the plot better than just reading through it.
